Caught or taught?

Raising the profile of the role of adults as key promoters of the pleasure of reading. Redressing the balance of time devoted between teaching skills and developing positive attitudes to reading.

This highly thought provoking and practical course will explore the many ways that adults both in school and at home can play a critical role in developing children into life-long readers.

This half-day session is suitable for all key stages from Foundation to Key Stage Two practitioners and parents.

It will focus on:

- powerful ways for adults to role-model reading
- auditing the reading material made available to children
- tips on helping children choose books
- the creation of rich reading environments in the classroom, school and home
- inspirational techniques for sharing books
- the importance of storytime and storytelling techniques
- original book sharing and reviewing ideas
- novel approaches to Book Weeks and Special Events in schools.

“Voice, gesture, facial expression and movement are the story reader’s tools.”

This will be an in-service experience to remember!
